

“Oi, fella – watcha doing down there?” yelled a squeaky voice. You looked up to the green treetops and spotted a monkey. “Life’s better up here, you should try it,” he called down. “And that snake’s getting pretty close to you.”

You tried to clamber up the tree by wrapping your arms around but each time you just slipped back down. Then you had an idea. You touched your arms and they grew longer, just like the monkey’s. Quickly, you escaped from the snake.

3 Why did you go up the tree?

Up in the canopy, the leaves glinted in the sunlight and birds swooped over the tree tops. You could see the lorry zooming away. You had to help Shift.

“We better get swinging,” said the monkey. He swung off easily, moving from branch to branch. It was difficult to follow so you grew a bendy tail to help you. As you swung, you felt free. Then you remembered Shift and you got a sick feeling in your tummy.
